THE REPUBLICAN.

Established 1869. BELLEFONTE, PA., THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1910. Vol. 40. No. 25.

CONGRESSMAN BARCLAY WITHDRAWS FROM RACE

Formally Announces He is Not Candidate For Renomination.

PATTON IS IN THE LEAD

His Only Opponent for Republican Nomination is Emery, Whose Candidacy is Favored by Democrats—Primaries to Decide.

Congressman Charles F. Barclay authorizes "The Republican" to announce his withdrawal as a candidate for renomination in the Twenty-first district. The contest for the Republican nomination for Congress thus resolves itself into one between Charles E. Patton, of Clearfield county, and Lewis Emery, Jr., of McKean county. Between these two Republicans must make their choice.

The action of Mr. Barclay in taking himself out of the race simplifies the situation and removes the danger of such a division in the Republican vote as might make possible the nomination of Mr. Emery. Such a situation is what the Democrats hoped would not come about, for they preferred Republican confusion and anything else calculated to improve the prospect of Democratic success.

All true Republican will rejoice in the fact that it is now possible for them to concentrate their strength upon one Republican candidate at the primaries on June 4. Mr. Barclay had his friends and they would have supported him at the primaries. Mr. Patton had his friends and they would have accorded him their support. Mr. Emery would have profited by this division of the party strength. Any such result he now must regard as extremely improbable.

mired frery has asked the Republicans And, a bety-first district to support his [illegible] in his implied declaration that he prefers working in the Republican party to roaming with the Democrats, the present situation offers to him an opportunity to demonstrate his sincerity. There are two courses before him. One is to remain in the field and sow discord in the Republican ranks and thus improve the chances for the election of a Democratic Congressman in November. The other course is for him to withdraw from the field and thus contribute toward a unanimous nomination for Mr. Patton, party harmony in the campaign and overwhelming Republican victory at the polls. Which course will he follow?

The nomination of Mr. Patton will be especially pleasing to the Republicans of this district. Mr. Patton is experienced in business, conservative and in every way qualified to ably represent us at Washington. He is young and active and may be depended upon to devote his best efforts to the interests of his constituents.

Moreover, Mr. Patton is a true Republican. If he is elected to Congress he may be depended upon to stand squarely by the administration of President Taft. He is not the type of Republican who is honored by Republicans and then forms alliances with Democrats. He may be counted on for loyal support to Republican policies, not some times or a part of the time but always.

What of Mr. Emery? Where would he stand at Washington? Would he be loyal to President Taft and to the Taft policies, or would he be with the Republicans a part of the time and then, as he did four years ago, flop over into the Democratic camp? To have a representative in Congress who may be relied upon to be Republican seven days a week is not what Democrats want but it is what Republicans want. Those Democrats who want Mr. Emery elected believe that he would, at times at least, give his support to Democratic scehemes to capture control. If they cannot have a Democratic Congressman from this district they prefer a Congressman who will be one-half Republican and one-half Democrat. Republicans prefer a Republican who is all Republican and not a man who tries to ride in opposite directions at the same time.

Mr. Patton is all Republican. He is not a man who tries to carry water on both shoulders. The man who does invariably gets wet and sometimes is drowned. The primaries afford the Republicans af this district the opportunity to say which type of Republican they want to send to Congress. The nomination of Mr. Emery would be hailed by Democrats as a rebuke for the administration of President Taft and as indication of the election of a Democratic Congress, which would antagonize all Taft policies and stand as a stumbling block to progress. The nomination of Mr. Patton will be accepted as a vote of approval of President Taft and of his aim to give make possible employment and prosperity for all.

Congressman Barclay has not been in good health for some months. He faithfully endeavored to serve his constituents. Owing to ill health he was unable at times to do all that he would have liked to do. It has been known for some that his health made it a serious question with him whether he could withstand the strain of another campaign. His friends who earnestly hoped that he would be able to remain in the race accept his decision to withdraw and will accord Mr. Patton their support.

In announcing his withdrawal, Mr. Barclay issued the following statement:

"To the people of the 21st Congressional District of Pennsylvania.

"It is with regret I find it necessary to announce my withdrawal from the contest for the Republican nomination to Congress. Up to the present I had hoped my health might be sufficiently restored to justify my remaining in the field, but in this I have been disappointed, and instead, find it is not possible, in my present condition, to make this campaign.

"My physicians advise that it is not wise or safe for me to take upon myself the burden and anxiety of a campaign for the nomination and another campaign in prospect for election, my complete recovery depending upon rest and release from exacting cares.

"I am not unmindful of the fact that I owe a debt of gratitude to the people of the district, and should be willing to make a great sacrifice of personal comfort, for the sake of rendering them the far superior service I would be able to give by reason of the experience obtained during two terms in Congress.

"However, I have given careful consideration and due weight to every phase of the situation, but have been unable to arrive at any other conclusion than the one above stated.

"I feel it due my many friends in he district to state that I can hardly find words to express to them my sincere thanks for the hearty support they have given me in the past, and can assure them I have endeavored to serve the Nation, State and district loyally and faithfully."

HOSPITAL NEEDS $5000

Once Completed, Furnishing of the New Building is Assured.

The sum of $5,000 is needed to complete the extension to the Bellefonte hospital. At a meeting of the trustees of the hospital, held on Tuesday night, it was reported that the people of Bellefonte stand ready to furnish the new building once it is completed. It was not positively decided just what method will be adopted to raise the necessary funds, although it was the belief of all that in some manner the needed $5,000 would be secured.

Two handsome bequests were reported. One was that of Miss Myra Humes, who will furnish a children's ward. Miss Rebecca Rhoads will furnish the reception room. When the needs of the hospital are fully understood by the public, it is believed that others who are abundantly able will come forward with contributions.

The Bellefonte hospital is doing a splendid work and the demands upon it are becoming greater with each month. It is entirely probable that the near future will witness a radical change in the present system of State appropriations for the smaller hospitals. Such a change would vitally affect the Bellefonte hospital. In order to be prepared to ask the next Legislature for assistance, the people of Bellefonte must be able to show that they have done their part in extending the hospital work.

With but $5,000 needed to complete the unfinished building, and the work of furnishing the several wards necessarily held back until the building is ready for occupancy, the importance of raising the required money is self-apparent.

A Suggestion.

The work of constructing the State road through Bellefonte is under way, and we have a suggestion to offer. It is that property owners co-operate with the State, county and borough in paving from curb to curb all streets which are included in the State road extension. The paving, or macadam section comprising the State road, will be sixteen feet wide on Linn Street, leaving but a very few feet on either side, which will be unpaved. Property owners along a part of Allegheny Street have agreed to share the expense of paving the narrow strip on either side of the State road, to be uniform with the State road. Property owners along other sections of streets could do likewise, and at a minimum cost. The improvement would be one that would repay the property owners many times over.

ACCUSE MRS. YEARICK OF POISONING HUSBAND

Lodged in Lock Haven Jail Pending Result of Inquest.

SAYS SHE IS INNOCENT

Denies Cooking Meal Which Caused Yearick's Death—Chemists Seek Arsenic in Stomach—"The Republican" Had Exclusive Story.

Mrs. Harry Yearick is in the Clinton county jail, at Lock Haven, charged with poisoning her husband, whose death occurred at Hecla, on Wednesday night of last week, and which fact was published exclusively in "The Republican." A chemical analysis of the dead man's stomach is being made at State College to determine the exact cause of his death.

Mrs. Yearick was arrested by Detective S. H. Myers, of Lock Haven, immediately upon her return on Saturday evening from her husband's funeral, which was held at Centre Hall. The arrest was made at the home of John Yearick, brother of the dead man, at Hecla. Manifesting no emotion when apprised of the terrible charge filed against her, Mrs. Yearick, who was dressed in deep mourning, calmly protested her innocence and denied that she had cooked the meal which her husband had eaten a short time before his death. She was taken to Lock Haven late Saturday night and after a preliminary hearing before Alderman Anthony, at that place, was committed to jail without bail. Interrogated by District Attorney Hall and Detective Myers, Mrs. Yearick declared that she had no idea as to how her husband had been poisoned. During the examination, Mrs. Yearick did not remove the heavy black veil which hid her features, and her answers were given in a cool, collected manner.

Mrs. Yearick will be given a further hearing, following the holding of an inquest. The date for the hearing will be governed by the completion of the analysis of her husband's stomach. The

SAY FATHER AND SON SET TIMBER ON FIRE

Reuben and Ralph Etters, of Snow Shoe, are Held for Court.

THEY DENY THE CHARGE

Alleged That Accused Men Caused Blaze Two Years Ago on Lands of Spruce Creek Hunting and Fishing Club, in Burnside Twp.

Charged with having set fire to timber on the lands of the Spruce Creek Hunting and Fishing Club, in Burnside township, Reuben Etters and his son, Ralph, of Snow Shoe, were on Saturday held under $500 bail for court by Squire William H. Musser. The two men were bound over after a hearing, at which, according to Squire Musser, Hudson H. Fye and his son, Allen, swore that Ralph Etters had boasted that he and his father had caused the fire. Bail for Mr. Etters and his son was furnished by David Chambers. The case will be on trial in court next week.

According to Squire Musser, the offense with which Mr. Etters and his son are charged, was committed on September 15, 1908. It also developed that the admission, which the elder Mr. Fye testified was made by Mr. Etters' son, was made on the day following the fire, or almost two years ago. No arrests were made in the case, however until last week, when warrants were issued at the instigation of Constable James Sankey, of Burnside township. According to the friends of the accused men, the charges are founded largely on spite-work.

The Spruce Creek Hunting and Fishing Club has several thousand acres of land, used for the entertainment of the owners, who are mostly Philadelphians. The club lands are in charge of R. B. Daugherty, who acts as a warden. Residents of Snow Shoe, and in fact all others not members of the club, are prevented going on the lands to hunt or fish. On several occasions the club has brought

CHARLES E. PATTON, of Curwensville.

Charles E. Patton is a resident of Curwensville, Clearfield county, and is a son of the late General John Patton, who was a member of the Thirty-seventh and Fiftieth sessions of Congrese. His brother, the late John Patton, Jr., was a member of the United States Senate from Michigan.

Pretty nearly everbody in Centre county knew and held in affectionate esteem Mr. Patton's brother, the late Alexander E. Patton, who served with distinction in the State Senate, at Harrisburg. Senator Patton's friends were legion. He had the happy faculty of making friends and winning their confidence, and to his credit let it be said that he was never known to betray a friend or violate a confidence.

In general make-up Charles E. Patton is much like his late brother. He is genial, broad-minded and unassuming and impresses one with the thought that he is a man who wears well; that he is a man who makes and deserves friends and stands by them.

Mr. Patton is in the prime of life, being just fifty years of age. He has had a wide experience in business. He is a large employer of labor, being identified with extensive lumber, electric, banking and railroad contracting interests.

And then, Mr. Patton is a Republican through and through. He has voted for every Republican President from Garfield to Roosevelt and Taft. Among his home people he stands high and by those who know him intimately he is regarded as a man absolutely above reproach. Mr. Patton is a member of the Susquehanna Grange, an Odd Fellow, a Mason and a Shriner.

ELKS CLUB DEDICATION

New Home of Bellefonte Lodge Scene of Interesting Reception.

The new home of the Bellefonte Lodge of Elks, the old Governor Curtin homestead, was formally dedicated yesterday, a reception being held from 3 to 9 o'clock, P. M. The occasion afforded the citizens of Bellefonte their first opportunity to inspect the magnificent clubhouse which has been occupied by the Elks for the last three months. During the hours that the doors were open there was an almost unbroken line of visitors all of whom were taken in hand by club members and escorted through the building.

The several officers of the Elks comprised the Reception Committee. Music was rendered by Smith's orchestra and a buffet lunch was served. All told, several hundred persons visited the clubhouse, and the verdict of all was that the Elks have the finest home of any organization in the State outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburg.

ARTHUR GROVE LEAVES MISS FLORAY IN WEST

Gregg Township Girl who Eloped, Penniless in Michigan.

HE IS OUT IN ILLINOIS

Wife of Man who Deserted Her Mails Letter on Train to Prevent Discovery of His Whereabouts—Friends Expect Girl to Return.

Esther Florey, the 16-year-old Gregg township girl who several weeks ago eloped with Arthur M. Grove, the young farmer who deserted his family, has been left stranded in Michigan. Grove, according to the belief of former friends in Gregg township, is working somewhere in Illinois.

The young girl, it is said, recently wrote to her parents explaining that she was in Michigan and alone and that she didn't have sufficient money to pay her way home. Whether she explained or even knew where Grove is has not been learned. By the neighbors of the young girl's parents it is expected that she will soon return home.

Grove, it will be recalled, left his wife and four small children and disappeared from his farm in Gregg township on the same day that Miss Floray mysteriously left her home, which was but a short distance away. Shortly after that the Grove farm was sold. Mrs. Grove received the household goods, some farm stock and a part of the cash proceeds of the sale. She now is living with her father, Isaac Haugh, whose home is in the Brush Valley side of Gregg township.

Several weeks ago it was learned that Mrs. Grove had received a letter from her missing husband. She declined to tell her friends where the letter had been mailed and to disclose its contents. A few days ago it developed that Miss Floray was in Michigan, too, that Grove had left her and had gone to Illinois. At about the same time Mrs. Grove sent a letter to him, mailing it on the train to guard against postoffice clerks learning the address.

KNOCKS OUT WORK ROAD TAX

Judge Orvis Declares This Feature of Law Unconstitutional.

Judge Orvis yesterday handed down an opinion declaring that the voters of a borough or township do not have the right to vote on the question of paying road tax by work instead of cash. Judge Orvis decided that the section of the road law, giving voters such a privilege, is unconstitutional.

The decision of Judge Orvis affects not only the several boroughs and townships in Centre county but in all parts of the State, unless over-ruled by the higher courts. His opinion was prompted by an appeal from Howard township, where a majority vote was polled in favor of paying road tax by work instead of by cash. Judge Orvis' ruling that the voters of Howard township had no legal right to vote on the question also applies to Benner township, where a majority vote was likewise polled in favor of a work tax.

The law directly affected by Judge Orvis' ruling is a part of an amendment to the road law, adopted by the Legislature of 1910. The old road law provided that seventy-five percent of a man's road tax should be paid by work. The 1909 amendment provided that all road tax should be paid in cash, but gave to the voters of any borough or township the privilege of deciding at the polls in favor of a work tax system if they were dissatisfied with the cash system. Judge Orvis holds that the section giving voters this privilege is the part which is unconstitutional. He holds that it is not referred to in the title of the act, and is therefore invalid. A title of any act must specify the thing or things covered by the body of the act.

As matters now stand all road tax must be paid in cash.

Girl Thrown From Horse.

Miss Sarah Rishel, the young daughter of Al. Rishel, was thrown from a colt several days ago and sustained a fractured collar bone. She was removed at the Bellefonte hospital, where her injures were dressed.

A Germless Disease.

They are going to send her back home—back to Vienna, from which city she came to Cincinnati two years ago. She is suffering from a disease that isn't the result of germs or bacilli; nor is there any serum or antitoxin they can give her to bring back the flush of health to the cheeks of Mrs. Hildegard Hudsko. She could probably pass an examination for life insurance without any trouble; and yet, if she were to stay here two more years, it is not at all unlikely that she would be buried in America. For Mrs. Hildegard Hudsko is a victim of nostalgia.

If you have ever been away from home longer than you intended to be or than you wanted to, that sudden, almost sickening wave of depression that came over you when you saw some one or something from your own town or village, was the forerunner or nostalgia. Nostalgia, reduced to simple terms, is plain homesickness. It is a hardened individual, indeed, who goes through life to the end without having at some time or another had a touch of the mental disease that frequently results in a real physical breakdown. Medical authorities recognize it, and one school at least has a definite medicine for it; but the only certain cure for nostalgia is a return of the afflicted one to the scenes for which he or she longs. That is why the Ohio Humane Society is going to send Mrs. Hudsko back to Austria, where her heart and all her thoughts are now. Though we may be inclined to pooh-pooh the effects of homesickness in its most intense form, those who ought to know declare that it must be regarded as a disease that may lead to melancholia and even death.

So, when you are away from the spot you love and have that sinking, "all-gone" feeling, don't go to a physician, or seek a druggist's advice on what patent medicine to take. Go home! That's the only sure cure yet evolved for the disease that is defined as "a combination of phychic and bodily disturbance."

Hats, Hatpins and Ballots.

Chicago has passed an ordinance limiting the length, sharpness and use of the hatpin. Indianapolis has declared the long stickers deadly weapons. San Francisco is considering, St. Louis pondering and Pittsburg has it on the list.

Shall women be allowed to carry deadly weapons about in their hats? That is the question statesmen are debating. But the family provider is wrestling with another phase of the problem. He considers the $48 hat much more deadly than the hatpin. As an ultimate consumer he wonders why the law allows the fashion makers to put a 75-cent rooster on 30 cents' worth of straw, call it a "Chantecler" and charge his wife $19 for it. He hopes Senator Lodge and his committee will investigate the subject and find if it is the rooster hat which has raised the price of chickens and taken eggs out of reach. The ramifications of the subject are almost endless. If a husband refuses to pay for a 3-foot hat, has his wife the right to stab him with a 14-inch hatpin? If a man refuses to provide for the support of a $50 hat in the style to which it is accustomed is it a ground for divorce? These are questions that man must have settled before he will consent for woman to be given the ballot. He must feel that he is not to be deprived of life, liberty or the pursuit of happiness. He must be assured that he is not to be chased with the hatpin nor dogged by the milliner. He wants room left him to walk on earth unmenaced and unhissed.—Baltimore Sun.

A HARD STRUGGLE

Many a Bellefonte Citizen Finds the Struggle Hard.

With a back constantly aching,
With distressing urinary disorders,
Daily existence is but a struggle.
No need to keed it up.
Bellefonte people endorse this claim.

Mrs. C. Johnson, 365 E. Bishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "I cannot say too much in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills, for they are the best remedy I ever used for backache and other symptoms of kidney complaint. At one time my back was so lame and painful that I could hardly get around and dizzy spells were common. I was restless at night and my kidneys gave me great annoyance, the secretions being too frequent in passage. On the advice of a member of my family who had used Doan's Kidney Pills with benefit, I procured a supply at Green's Pharmacy Co. and they did me more good than any other medicine I had previously taken. The passages of the kidney secretions were regulated and the pain and lameness in my back was removed. I heartily recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone afflicted with kidney complaint." (Statement given Oct. 31, 1907.) Permanent Relief. On Nov. 23, 1909 Mrs. Johnson was interviewed and she said: "I still have unlimited confidence in Doan's Kidney Pills. They permanently cured me of kidney trouble and I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past two years. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case benefit has been received."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agent for the United States.

The Cost of Divorce.

It is estimated that the lowest price for which a divorce can be obtained in England is $220. This is considered very high, and it is pointed out that it makes divorce prohibitory for poor people.

We are not in favor of any divorce whatever, believing that the South Carolina law on this question is the best of all laws, in that it does not permit the breaking of the marriage contract for any cause. However, we believe that if divorce is to be recognized and granted by the courts, the remedy should be open to the poor as well as the rich. Moreover, the proceedings should be in the open, be the parties at issue either rich or poor, and such a scandalous secretion of the facts as was permited in a recent prominent divorce case in New York should never be allowed.

Those who feel that it is necessary to separate should not be so sensible as to fear the verdict of the public—a verdict generally more just than that of judge or jury.

Sweet-Milk Craham Muffins.

Mix and sift one cupful of Graham flour, one fourth of a cupful of sugar, four teaspoonfuls of baking-powder and one teaspoonful of salt. Add gradually, while stirring or beating constantly, one cupful of milk, one egg well beaten and one tablespoonful of butter. Fill buttered gem-pans two thirds full of mixture and bake in a hot oven twenty-five minutes.—Fannie Merritt Farmer in Woman's Home Companion For May.

Beasts Capable of Long Fasting.

Food is undoubtedly essential to the maintenance of life, but in the absence of food death is not always swift. Many animals have been known to exist for lengthened periods either entirely without nourishment or with a very limited supply of it.

There is a case on record in which a great fall of earth at Dover, in England, buried a whole family. A hog shared the fate of the family, so far as to be buried by the same landslide. Five months and nine days passed, and then the hog was discovered--alive. Presumably it had had neither food nor drink in the interval.

It had not put on flesh in its time of enforced rest. It weighed about 140 pounds when the accident occurred, and when found had wasted to 30 pounds.

Another curious case of fasting by an animal is that of a steer in Maryland. In the month of October a notice appeared in a journal announcing that a young steer had strayed away from a certain farm. The whereabouts of that steer remained a mystery until the end of the January following, when one of the farm hands noticed several hens going into a hole in a straw stack in the barnyard. Thinking they had a nest there, he crawled in about 15 feet, only to come out with great speed. He declared that the place was haunted, for something had kicked him. Another man was sent in, but he came out exclaiming that there was something alive in that straw stack. He had felt a hairy leg and it had kicked at him.

A hole was therefore cut in the stack and the missing steer was found. It had been imprisoned under the straw for ninety-nine days, without water, and with no food but the straw that hemmed it in. It had not, however, been as badly off as the hog, for it had eaten a hole in the stack about 10 feet square.

It was after remembered that the steer had been seen standing against the stack during the second day's threshing, and that the straw was then falling upon it, but no one had supposed that it had not moved away.

When found the animal was very weak, but on careful feeding showed signs of recovery.

Sealing-Wax Cuff-Buttons.

"The necessary materials are a pair of cuff-buttons (tarnished or old ones will do) and a few sticks of colored sealing-wax," says Woman's Home Companion for May. "In selecting the wax, be sure to choose colors that will give the right touch to the costume with which they are to be worn. Two shades of blue will look very effective with a white waist, and copper blended with gold is beautiful with brown linen. To make, hold the stick of wax over a candle flame until it is soft, and then dab it on the cuff-button. Heat the wax again and repeat until the button is built the required size; then mold into the shape desired. Any-shape may be made. An initial may be put on, or, if desired, a fancy carved button may be pressed on the wax while it is soft, and a carved design secured. This work requires but a little practice to get really beautiful and desirable results, and it costs very little."

The High Cost of Living.

Increases the price of many necessities without improving the quality. Foley's Honey and Tar maintains its high standard of excellence and its great curative qualities without any increase in cost. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and all ailments of the throat, chest and lungs. The genuine is in a yellow package. Refuse ubstitutes. Sold by C. M. Parrish.

A Gold Mine Incident.

As long as the American public is gullible, so long will the promot rs of questionable gold mines be able to sell their stock. And judging from the past, a la Patrick Henry, the future will continue to produce enough easily influenced individuals to give the aforesaid promoters a reason for their existence. If you have at home or in your strong box one or more gorgeously engraved bits of crackly paper bearing witness to the fact that you have put 5 or 8 or 39 cents into a share of the Richer-than-Croesus Guaranteed Gold Mine, it would be a good idea to get it out and paper the kitchen or the attic or some other room in the house, where it won't call to mind too frequently your reckless extravagance.

That is what Henry Brink of Melrose, Cal., did with 2000 or 3000 shares he owned in an Arizona gold mine. He spent several hundred dollars for those shares and, after waiting for an indefinite period for them to become of more value than the money he put into them, Brink proved his ability to laugh at Fate and his own folly. He papered his room with the souvenirs; doubtless it kept him from going into many other get-rich-quick mines. But --and here is the milk in the cocoanut—Mr. Brink's adventure proved the exception. A few days ago he was informed that while gold had never been found in the gold mine, porcelain clay of a rare and marketable quality had been. The man who could enjoy a joke on himself promptly soaked the shares of stock off his walls and put them back, in the safe again.

This little incident should teach us three things: (1) That, although in gold mining stocks the ratio of those that make good to those that don't is about one to a thousand, still it might be well to use certificates as wall paper rather than to burn them. (2) That while your experience may be a duplicate of Mr. Brink's---if you live long enough----it is well to remember that real gold mining stock is rarely sold at bargain prices. And lastly, while a deed to plain, every-day real estate or a savings bank book isn't as pretty to look upon as certificates of this kind, they are usually much more satisfactory in the long run. Cincinnati Times-Star.

HE WON TWO BETS

A Story of Baseball Rivalry Between Two Teams.

By CLARA B. TUCKER.

Beatrice Barr was born a tomboy At ten wrestling with her brother, two years her senior, she downed him. From fourteen to sixteen it was all horseback with her—no saddle preferred. At seventeen she quieted down a bit.

About this time Tom Barr, her brother, was chosen captain of the Arlington baseball club. Beatrice at the meets of her brother's club with other clubs never failed to occupy a front seat on the grand stand with a card and a pencil in her hand, and those about her always depended on her for the score. She was very keen to see the correct side of all disputed points, and often an umpire would take her opinion in preference to his own.

Now, the great rivals of the Arlingtons, captained by Tom Barr, were the Crescents, led by Dick Thruston. The Arlingtons had kept the lead of the Crescents till Thruston took command of the latter. After that there came a series of defeats for the Arlingtons that made Captain Barr furious. Thruston was a splendid specimen of male youth. With a superb figure, great muscular strength and a quick, springy step he was to be admired from an artistic point of view. And, a born commander, he was just the man to organize and captain a baseball team. What assured his success was that he was a first class pitcher.

At the end of the season Thruston had placed his team so far ahead of Barr's that the latter made up his mind to reorganize for the next season with a view to regaining the position he had lost. He was busy all winter examining and testing the skill of applicants and by spring had got together as likely a lot of boys as ever composed a baseball club. But in spite of all he could do he could not find a pitcher to match Dick Thruston.

Rumors of Barr's efforts reached the ear of the rival captain, and he, too, bestirred himself. The team he selected was as much better than the team he had led the season before as Tom's was superior to the one which had been defeated. And so it was that when the series of games was entered upon the Arlingtons and the Crescents were evenly matched except that the latter could outpitch the former.

Nevertheless Tom Barr entered upon the season's games with considerable confidence. He bantered Thruston as to what he would do with him, and Thruston, who was as much of a thoroughbred as a baseball player, only smiled and said: "I'd like to see you do it, Tom. There's no fun with the luck all on one side."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Tom. "I'll bet you a hat we beat you on the games during the season."

"All right," replied Thruston. "I'll take that."

"And I'll make you another bet. I'll bet you a box of cigars against a dozen pairs of gloves that we'll beat you at least one game with a man short on our team."

"I don't quite understand that," said Thruston.

"Do you take the bet?"

"Anything you like."

"Done." And Tom repeated the terms of the two bets.

"Another thing," Tom continued. "There's only one person I can get to match you in pitching—a negro. Do you object to playing against one of the colored race?"

"Not if my team don't. I'll speak to them about the matter."

Thruston soon after sent Captain Barr permission to introduce a negro into the game if required.

The agreement between the two clubs was that they were to play seven games, four to win, the games to be played on alternate Saturday afternoons, beginning with the second Saturday in April. There was great interest manifested on the part of the friends of the two teams, and when the first game was played the grand stand was packed and much of the standing room was taken up. A fine lot of boys on each side were arrayed, and the play from the first was the finest that had ever been played between the Arlingtons and the Crescents. The regular pitcher was in place for the former, Barr not having availed himself of the permission he had received to use the negro. After a hard fought game the Arlingtons won by a few runs.

When the game was finished some said that it had been won by Beatrice Barr's presence and encouragement. At any rate, she was adored by the members of her brother's team, and there was not one of them who would not give his head to serve her. A few, while attributing the Arlingtons' success to her, referred that success to a far different cause. They said that if Captain Thruston had kept his eyes off Beatrice Barr and fixed his attention on the game the score would have been very different.

The second game was played under very much the same conditions, and again the Arlingtons won. By this time a number of the Crescents had noticed that their captain was not doing his best, and one of them went to him and expostulated. Thruston knew very well what was the matter with him, though he did not reveal the secret. He promised that the next game should show up very differently.

And it did. Barr fixed his attention on the game and won it by half a dozen runs—not only that, but he beat the next, the fourth game. During both the third and fourth games Beatrice Barr was not present. It was given out that she was ill. Some malicious spectators declared that she had been bribed by the Crescents with ten pounds of candy to keep away. This only excited merriment. All knew that she was wrapped up in the success of her brother's team. But when the fifth game came round and she was again absent, the Crescents winning, many who had noticed Thruston's bad play while she was present looked knowing and whispered to one another that they believed there might be something in the bribery story after all. Beatrice was not in her seat at the sixth game; but, despite her absence, the Arlingtons won.

Each team had now won three games, and the seventh was to decide the championship. Beatrice Barr told some of her most intimate girl friends that she would love to see the game, but she had understood that unpleasant remarks had been made about the effect of her presence on the result and she had decided to remain away from the grand stand. She was not in her seat when the deciding game was played, but it was said that she watched it from behind the blinds of a house overlooking the oval.

When the teams went out on to the field a negro was noticed among the Arlingtons. Captain Thruston was about to protest when he remembered that he had agreed that Barr should use a negro pitcher if he chose. Some surprise was indicated that a boy of his size was expected to do extra fine pitching. He was but average height, and his muscles did not show under his loose suit. But when he began to pitch the secret came out. He could do things with a baseball that a champion billiardist can work with the ivories. Few could hit his balls, and those who did usually sent them straight up in the air, to be caught by the outs.

During the changes from the bat various persons, mostly from among the Crescents' side, attempted to get near the colored pitcher to have a look at him or question him, but he managed to keep pretty well away from them and would only answer "Yes" or "No." Finally, seeing that he was not to be interviewed, they let him alone. The Crescents held the last inning, the negro pitching. The Arlingtons led in the score by two runs. Thruston was at the bat, and it was expected that he would make a hit to enable the men on the bases to get in, three men hoping to complete their runs and win the game. But the negro served the balls with such curves that Thruston either sent them straight up in the air or they struck the ground near his feet. Finally, one of his skyrockets being caught, the game was lost to the Crescents. Dick Thruston dropped his bat and with a chivalry for which he was noted strode forward with outstretched hand to congratulate the pitcher for having won the game for his team. But the negro, instead of waiting for him, ran away at the top of his speed and disappeared from the oval.

Tom Barr ran up to Thruston and said:

"I've won two bets from you, Dick."

"What two bets?"

"Bets we made at the beginning of the season—one that we'd beat you on the score of games, the other that we'd beat you a game one man short on our team."

"You've won the first, but I don't see how you've won the second."

"Come round to the house this evening and I'll explain."

That evening Thruston, having doffed his baseball clothes, in immaculate attire called at the Barrs'. He found Tom with Beatrice, who was dressed in her most becoming costume. She hung her head before the gaze of her admirer.

"You told me today," Tom said to Dick, "that you didn't understand how I had won our second bet. The last game was played with eight men and a girl. There is the girl. She's been two hours washing off the burnt cork."

Dick stood looking at Beatrice in astonishment; then he repeated his act at the close of the game. He seized her hand and poured forth a volume of congratulations and compliments.

The most important feature connected with the struggle between the Arlington and Crescent teams was the announcement in the autumn of the engagement of Dick Thruston and Beatrice Barr.

Cookery Points

Rhubarb is at its best at this time of the year, and this product of the garden has many uses not only for the table, but for medicinal purposes, says Marion Neil Harris. The part used the most is the foot stalk of the leaves. The roots take up many acids and are astringent; hence the value of the dried roots as a medicine. Rhubarb is a powerful zest giver. When merely placed in the mouth and left unmasticated there is a rush of the saliva from the glands to deal with the quantity of acid in the mouth. This is excellent in cases where the digestive fluids need stimulation. Any food taken will be absorbed through the pouring out of digestive fluids. Though a vegetable, rhubarb is used in every respect as a fruit. Eaten stewed, so that the acids are tart in it, the stalk acts as a foe to gout and to rheumatism, for it neutralizes the uric acid that causes these things. It is also a specific for the complexion. There are many ways of preparing it for the table, and the following recipes ought to be pleasing:

Rhubarb Sponge.

Line a mold with slices of sponge cake, pressed firmly around the inside. Fill up the mold with stewed rhubarb, not too moist, sprinkle with sugar, covering the top with more slices of cake, cover with a plate and press down with a weight for a few hours, when the juice of the rhubarb will be absorbed by the cake. Turn out very carefully, decorate with little pieces of angelica and serve with a nice custard.

Compote of Rhubarb.

Wipe the rhubarb with a damp cloth and cut it into lengths of four or five inches. Put into a saucepan five pounds of sugar with two pints of water. Bring quickly to boiling point and skim, and then boil till the sirup is quite thick. Then add the rhubarb and simmer gently till soft. Lift each length carefully and lay it on a glass dish. Then boil the sirup a few minutes longer. Let it cool. Then add a few drops of red coloring and pour over the rhubarb. Serve with cream and lady fingers.

Cookies For School Children.

Hungry school children love oatmeal cookies when they are just right. If mealy and dry they will have none of them; if candied, crisp and sweet they are eaten to the last crumb. Here is a recipe:

Cream together smoothly three-quarters of a cup of butter and one cup of brown sugar. Add to this half a cup of cream or milk and two eggs that have had the whites and yolks beaten separately and very stiff. Beat the whole carefully together and then stir in two cups of rolled oats. Beat again vigorously, and then add one cup of well sifted whole wheat flour.

Add a level teaspoonful of soda, one of salt and one each of cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg and a pinch of black pepper. Beat again and then drop from a large spoon on buttered tins and bake in a fairly quick oven.

The Window Shelf.

The housekeeper who has once learned the comfort of a shelf outside her kitchen window will never again be without one. Where there are outside shutters this should be low enough below the sill to enable them to close easily.

The shelf may be just a plain board, wide enough for pots and bowls, or if in an exposed position there should be a two inch rim around the edge.

For occasional use a shallow box nailed to the window in such a way that the inside of the box faces the kitchen is useful to put articles of food in that will overflow the refrigerator. The top and sides of box keep snow, rain and dust from the provisions, yet a low temperature can be maintained. This could not be used with outside shutters.

Matrimony Tarts.

Matrimony tarts is the odd name to an apple dessert of which there are many varieties. This particular apple tart or pudding calls for one dozen apples, a quarter pound of currants picked, washed and dried; two ounces of candied peel chopped fine, a little grated nutmeg, some sifted sugar and puff paste.

Pare, core and quarter the apples. Put them into a saucepan with a little water and stew them to a pulp, stirring frequently. Then add the currants, the chopped peel, sugar to taste and nutmeg.

Line a pudding dish with puff paste; pour the fruit, when it has cooled a little, into it; cover with crust, press the edges together all around, make a hole in the center and bake.

"Tried and True Layer Cake."

Cream one and three-quarter cups of sugar with one-half cup of butter, add three eggs and beat the batter hard. Stir in a cup of sour milk into which a generous pinch of baking soda has been beaten. Last of all, whip in lightly three cups of flour that has been sifted with two teaspoonsful of baking powder. Bake in three layers and put together with any kind of icing or filling.

Night Blindness.

Inability to see by day is matched by the commoner night blindness which most of us have known in friend or relative. This defect, which includes an inability to see even by artificial light, is congenital with some people and never overcome. It is often hereditary. It may also be caused, however, by long exposure to an overbright light, coupled with fatigue. A strange story is told concerning a ship's crew two centuries ago which were overcome by night blindness so extreme that their captain was obliged to force a fight with a Spanish privateer during the day, knowing that by night his men would be helpless. In order to obviate this difficulty for future occasions he ordered each sailor to keep one eye bound during the daytime, discovering, to his gratification, that this eye, having rested, was then free of the defect. The sailors were very amusing in their efforts to retain the bandage well over the eye that must be ready for night duty, and so a method of modifying this trouble was discovered—London Strand Magazine.

The Attorney In England.

The use of the word attorney denotes a belated mind. Since Nov. 1, 1875, attorneys have ceased to exist, their title merged by law into that of solicitor of the supreme court of judicature, says a writer in the London Mail. The name had long been used as a term of abuse. Johnson observed of an acquaintance that "he did not care to speak ill of any man behind his back, but he believed the gentleman was an attorney."

Archbishop Trench, in 1859, noted that the word attorney was going out of favor and that the lower branch of the legal profession preferred to be called solicitors. So when the judicature act of 1873 was before parliament a clause was inserted abolishing the obnoxious title. But with our delightful conservatism we still honor the "attorney general."

Holland.

Holland, known as North and South Holland, forms part of the northern part of the Netherlands. These provinces are composed of land rescued from the sea and defended by immense dikes. Holland was inhabited by the Batvi in the time of Caesar, who made a league with them. It became part of Gallia Belgica and afterward of the kingdom of Austria. From the tenth to the fifteenth century it was governed by counts under the German emperors. Holland was at one time a Dutch republic. It was created a kingdom in 1806, and Louis Bonaparte, father of Napoleon III., was declared king.

Enthusiasm Dulled.

"Don't you feel as if you would like to leave footprints in the sands of time?" asked the ambitious citizen.

"No," answered Mr. Crosslots gloomily; "out where I live the mud is eighteen inches deep, and I don't feel as if I wanted to see another footprint as long as I live."—Washington Star.

Speaking of Senators.

For so long it has been the fashion of muckrakers and mud throwers to malign United States Senators and others in public life that it is the exception rather than the rule that anything good about such men is allowed to come to light. To read some of the articles, written by reckless and irresponsible writers, one might imagine that most members of the United States Senate wear horns and stand about waiting to devour all happening to pass that way.

Of course, much of the criticism and abuse is exaggerated and in many instances is founded on imagination. Time was, and that but a few years ago, when the more sensational the article about men in public life, the higher price it commanded and the more widely it was read. Happily, sensationalism is in the decline because the people, at heart, want to see fair play and once they know they are being misled and deceived, they soon refuse to read sensational and wildly garbled articles. Advertisers who once sought the columns of sensational newspapers and magazines are more and more each week turning to the conservative and truthful publications.

Speaking of United States Senators, we noticed a day or two ago a dispatch from Washington which related an incident, the like of which happens many times at not only Washington but Harrisburg and every other State capitol. Senator Oliver, of Pennsylvania, and eleven other Senators contributed $1,050 to a fund for the benefit of Mrs. Eliza V. Farris, of Lancaster, Kentucky. Let us quote from the dispatch:

"The fund was raised on an appeal by Senator Bradley, of Kentucky, to the Senate Claims Committee for favorable action on a bill he had introduced giving Mrs. Farris $1000 for her services as a nurse to Union soldiers during the war. She turned her house into a hospital and nursed wounded Union soldiers without compensation or hope of compensation. She also visited the camps in Kentucky and ministered to the wants of the wounded, becoming known as 'The Angel of the Hospitals.' In her old age she is in straitened circumstances and Senator Bradley thought Congress ought to do something for her.

"The Claims Committee felt that to pass the Bradley bill would create a dangerous precedent. Senator Smoot, however, was so impressed by Bradley's plea that he suggested a subscription for her benefit and 12 Senators contributed the $1050. Senators Oliver, Bradley, Depew, Guggenheim, Elkins, Bourne, Smith, of Michigan, duPont and Smoot each gave $100, while Senator Briggs, of New Jersey gave $50."

Speaking of muckrakers, whoever heard of one going down into his jeans to help anybody?

The Crops.

While the late cold wave west and south is conceded to have done some damage, especially to early fruits, vegetables and cotton, the feeling is that the damage from this cause has been exaggerated, says Bradstreet's Weekly Report. There is, however, evidence that reports of insect damage to winter wheat have played a more important part in crop reports and markets than at any time in the present season. Between the reports of winter-killing, acreage abandonment, drought and insect damage, there is little expectation that a crop much larger than last year is now possible. On the other hand, the area in corn, oats and spring wheat is larger, and good growing weather still holds possibilities of large if not record yields, though much of the early start secured has been lost. Especially good reports as to winter wheat come from the Pacific northwest, Texas and Oklahoma. Texas and Oklahoma will, according to all accounts, produce record crops of wheat, and the latter state, with good weather, promises the largest yield of cotton ever secured. The lower Mississippi valley report as to cotton are not especially good, but east of there to the coast the crop accounts are better than seemed possible a week ago. It is, however, certain that some cotton replanting has been necessary, and the oil mills are reported supplying the seed freely on reasonable conditions. The Florida potato crop has not been up to anticipations as regards quantity or price. Vegetable crops along the Alantic coast from Florida north have escaped frost damage and are turning out well.

State Convention Call.

April 16, 1910.

To The Republican Electors of Pennsylvania:

I am directed by the Republican State Committee to announce the Republicans of Pennsylvania, by their duly chosen representatives, will meet in convention at the Majestic Theatre in the City of Harrisburg, on Wednesday, June 22, 1910, at 10.30 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following offices, to wit:

One person for the office of Governor;

One person for the office of Lieutenant-Governor;

One person for the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs, also for the nomination of a candidate for any other office which is to be filled at the general election in November next, and the transaction of such other business as may be presented.

In accordance with the rules governing the Republican party in Pennsylvania, the representation in the State Convention will be based on the vote polled at the last presidential election; under the rules each legislative district is entitled to one delegate for every two thousand votes cast for the presidential electors in 1908, and an additional delegate for every fraction of two thousand votes polled in excess of one thousand.

By order of the Republican State Committee.

W. Harry Baker,
Secretary.

Accuse Mrs. Yearick.

inquest was scheduled to be held at Bellefonte on Tuesday, last, but was postponed on receipt of word from State College that additional time would be required to complete the analysis. The inquest will be conducted jointly by Coroner Huff, of Milesburg, and the Clinton county authorities. Yearick was poisoned at Salona, Clinton county, but his death occurred in Centre county.

Opinion differs as to how Yearick came to be poisoned. By some it is believed that arsenic was deliberately placed in the food which he ate and which caused his fatal illness. By others it is thought that Yearick died from the effects of poison, but that the poison was caused by tomatoes which had been left standing in a tin vessel. When first questioned on the subject, Mrs. Yearick denied having cooked the meal which resulted in her husband's death.

As told in "The Republican" last week, Yearick and a companion, named Joseph Walker, were employed at the lime stone quarries, at Salona, and lived together in a small house at that place. Yearick and his wife had been more or less enstranged for some time. He suspected that his wife was receiving the attentions of a man who had courted her prior to her marriage. Some time ago Yearick became afflicted with rheumatism and placed himself in the hands of a Centre Hall physician for treatment. It was when he returned home that his domestic troubles reached an acute stage. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Yearick. All four children now are being cared for by friends. One link in the chain of suspicion, which eventually resulted in the arrest of Mrs. Yearick, was the declaration by friends of the dead man that his wife had asked different persons to take her youngest child. Because of this it was suspected that she contemplated going away with the man whose attentions she had received prior to her marriage to Yearick.

Yearick was about 33 or 34 years old. Mrs. Yearick is about 35 years old and is rather good looking.

It was not until "The Republican" appeared on Thursday, last, that the officials of Centre and Clinton counties or the public in general were aware of Yearick's tragic death. Of all the newspapers in Centre county, "The Republican" alone was able to learn of the poisoning, gather the details and present a complete report in its entire county and Bellefonte editions. Appreciating the fact that the residents of Nittany Valley were intensely interested in the case, a copy of "The Republican" was placed in the hands of every resident of that section on Thursday afternoon, or less than twenty hours after Yearick's death. Due to our enterprise in scoring with this important piece of news, readers of "The Republican" in all parts of the county had the complete story, including the forecast of Mrs. Yearick's arrest. The readers of other newspapers were unable to get the news. It pays to read "The Republican."

A Handsome Souvenir.

We beg to acknowledge receipt of a very handsome souvenir in the shape of an elaborately illustrated and well printed report of the Pennsylvania Retail Jewelers' Association, of which Ira D. Garman, formerly of Bellefonte, is president, and which will hold its fifth annual convention, at the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, May 19-20. The fact that Mr. Garman has been advanced to the head of this large organization is evidence that the outside world appreciates his worth just as much as do his old time friends at home.

suit against persons for trespass. In a number of instances persons have innocently trespassed on the club's lands. Wherever discovered, however, trespassers have been made to pay heavy fines and costs. For this reason there is more or less ill feeling manifested toward the club owners.

The Lehigh Valley Coal Company owns large tracts of land at Snow Shoe, but does not prohibit persons using them for hunting and fishing. The company has posted notices on trees announcing that all persons may hunt and fish and camp on the grounds and asking their co-operation in protecting the timber from fires. This broad-minded and liberal policy on the part of the company is fully appreciated by the people of that community and they cheerfully respect the wishes of the company in protecting the timber and fences.

On numerous occasions Philadelphians and sportsmen from other cities have visited Snow Shoe to hunt and fish and they always were accorded a welcome and full privilege to hunt and fish wherever they might care to. When the Philadelphians organized the Spruce Creek Hunting and Fishing Club, however, they put up the bars against the residents of Snow Shoe and all that territory and in a night denied them the privilege of hunting and fishing on the club lands. In view of the general hospitality extended visitors in previous years, the new order of things provoked considerable indignation. Since that time whenever anything happened on the club lands it has been blamed on men residing in or about Snow Shoe.

The filing of such a serious charge against Mr. Etters and his son, especially since the charge was not made until almost two years after the alleged offense was committed, has provoked considerable comment among the friends of the accused and the people of Snow Shoe in general. Mr. Etters and his son bear good reputations and their friends stoutly maintain that they are not guilty.

Two Great Base Ball Games.

Two exceptionally fine baseball games were scheduled for the Bellefonte Academy team this week, that yesterday with the Bloomsburg State Normal team, and a game on Saturday afternoon with the Indiana State Normal School club. Those who witnessed yesterday's game will be sure to attend on Saturday. A large crowd should turn out, since the guarantee necessasy to bring teams of this class to Bellefonte is quite large and the gate receipts have not been anything like the amount necessary for actual expenses. Saturday's game will be called at 2.15 o'clock. Cheers will be in the pitcher's box for the Academy. Incidentally, the Academy on Saturday last defeated the strong Lock Haven State Normal School team after a nerve-racking struggle. The game put up by the Academy boys was one of the finest exhibitions of amateur baseball witnessed this season.

Benjamin Franklin said:

"The way to wealth, if you desire it, is as plain as the way to market. It depends chiefly on two words—industry and frugality. He that gets all he can honestly and saves all he gets (necessary expenses excepted) will certainly become rich."

Let us help you follow Franklin's advice. A proper bank will help you save money.

BOYD NOLAN'S SAD DEATH

Young Railroader Dies from Blood Poisoning; Result of Accident.

A death which was especially sad and which caused sorrow among a host of friends was that of Boyd Nolan at the Bellefonte hospital, late Monday night. As was told in "The Republican" last week, he had his left arm and shoulder crushed between two freight cars. His condition was not regarded as at all serious, and in fact it was thought that amputation of the arm would be unnecessary. On Sunday, however, he suddenly became much worse. Gangrene developed and his condition was such as to alarm his family and friends. On Monday morning he was very low, but the attending physicians still hoped to pull him through. On Monday night it was realized that his death was but a matter of a few hours, and about 11 o'clock he died.

Typical of the family, Boyd Nolan was a railroader. He was a brakeman on the Tyrone division of the Pennsylvania Railroad and was one of the most popular young men on the road. He will be best remembered by his many friends here as the happy faced boy who served as messenger at the Pennsylvania station at this place. Less than one year ago he was given a position as a brakeman. A few weeks ago he was transferred to the Bellefonte yards and it was there that he met with the accident which resulted in his death.

Boyd Nolan was a splendid young man and his death will be mourned by all who knew him. He was about 23 years old and was born at Bellefonte. His father was Jerry Nolan, who was an engineer on the Bellefonte Central Railroad and who died as a result of being squeezed between two cars at State College. Surviving are a widow and a little daughter, Henrietta, and his mother, and also the following sisters and brothers: Misses Anna and Rebie and Mrs. Harry Otto and Mrs. Frank Kerns, of Bellefonte; Daniel and John, of Tyrone, and Edward, Joseph and James, of Bellefonte. Funeral services were held today.

Mrs. William Nicholson.

Mrs. Della Nicholson, wife of William Nicholson, of Morrisdale, died at her late home at that place on Friday evening, last, after an extended illness. Deceased was a daughter of Asbury Gearhart, who makes his home with another daughter, Mrs. Harry Washburn, at Philipsburg. But one week prior to her death her brother, George W. Gearhart, was killed in the mines, near Johnstown. Mrs. Nicholson was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal church and was a woman held in high esteem by her many friends. Surviving are her husband and the following children: Clarence, Asbury, Edna, wife of Lynn Jacobs; Zana, wife of John Bennet; Lizzie, wife of John C. Moyer; Joseph, Mary, Anna and Samuel, all of Morrisdale. Surviving also are her father and three brothers and two sisters, viz: Herven Gearhart, Morrisdale; Lex and Lloyd, of Portage; Mrs. Harry Washburn, Philipsburg, and Mrs. Samuel Gunsallus, of Munson.

He was a carpenter and builder by trade and a member of Nucleus Lodge 377 I. O. O. F. at Monongahela. Surviving are three children, one son and two daughters: Mrs. Harry Smith and Mrs. Herbert Shipe, of Monongahela City, and Edward, at home. Talbot Smashes World Record.

Lee Talbot, of State College, succeeded in breaking the world's college record and eclipsing the world's intercollegiate record for the hammer throw with a mighty heave of 173 feet 6 inches of the 16-pound hammer, an unusual performance, including the breaking of three State and one Indian records, at last Saturday's Pennsylvania State vs. Carlisle Indians' dual track and field meet. With a tied score of 56 to 56, it was one of the most interesting college meets ever seen at Carlisle. Talbot and Tewanima were two Olympic victors in the events.

Talbot broke State's discus record and his own, made at Philadelphia last week, by putting the discus 130 feet 4 inches. State's two-mile record was beaten by Watts in 9 minutes and 52 seconds. Pappan broke the Indian's mile record by three seconds, by going in 4 minutes 33 seconds. The score was tied by the 220-yard dash, the last event, in which Dupuis unexpectedly won.

Gerberich's Refrigerator Robbed.

There was a scarcity of pie yesterday at the home of C. T. Gerberich, in Thomas Street. Not that Mr. Gerberich didn't have a good stock of delicious pies on hand as late as Tuesday evening, but because somebody visited his refreigerator during the night. Steaks and chops and everything else in the refrigerator went with the pies. It was the first time the Gerberich refrigerator was robbed, but the thieves made up for al that by taking everything in sight.

Mrs. Wian and daughter, of Bellefonte, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Fatkin.

ANECDOTES OF LATE KING

Interesting Incidents Regarding England's Late Ruler.

The death of King Edward has already brought out a flood of stories and anecdotes. Owing to the deep mourning of Queen Victoria, his mother, after the death of the prince consort, he was brought prominently forward while yet prince of Wales and he bore the title "The First Gentleman of Europe" for many years before he ascended the throne. Many of the stories being told bear witness to the tact and kindly disposition of the late king, while some of the most interesting relate to incidents of his extended travels, which included the North American and Asiatic continents as well as all parts of Europe.

An amusing incident is related of the birth of the king. The duke of Wellington happened to be at Buckingham palace on that November day, nearly 69 years ago, and met Mrs. Lily, the nurse.

"Is it a boy?" asked the nobleman.

Deeply incensed at the lack of formality on the part of the duke the nurse answered, a bit shortly, it is said:

"It's a Prince, your grace."

Through the laws of the British empire the first son of the monarch is, at the moment of birth, ipso facto, duke of Cornwall. The tiny heir to the throne soon had a number of other titles, however. Before he was four weeks old he was made prince of Wales and earl of Chester by royal patent. The little prince was soon also the duke of Rothesay, duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, prince of Saxony, earl of Carrick, earl of Dublin and baron Renfrew, while he had the picturesque title of "Lord of the Isles."

Although the simplicity of the royal mother, Queen Victoria, was shown in the fact that the future king received but two names, Albert Edward, his baptism was an exceedingly brilliant event. He was christened in St. George's chapel, Windsor, January 25, 1842. This was something of a departure, as most of the previous royal infants had been baptized in the palace. It is related that there was a long and earnest consultation before the sponsors were chosen, but the king of Prussia was finally asked and accepted.

His royal highness was well supported, the others on the list of sponsors as completed being the baby's step-grandmother, the elder duchess of Saxe-Coburg, represented at the christening by the duchess of Kent; the duke of Cambridge, the young duchess of Saxe-Coburg, Queen Victoria's sister-in-law, represented by the duchess of Cambridge; Princess Sophia, represented by the Princess Auguste of Cambridge, and Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg.

The young prince appears to have imbibed his somewhat democratic and genial manner while still a small child. Miss Alcott, the author of "Little Women," who visited London about 1849, wrote a letter to her friends at home which gives a picture of him at that time. She wrote, in telling about seeing him, that he was "a yellow-haired laddie, very like his mother," and continued:

"Fanny, W. and I nodded and waved as he passed and he openly winked his boyish eyes at us; for Fanny, with her yellow curls and wild waving, looked rather rowdy, and the poor little prince wanted some fun."

Many of the stories told about the late king refer to his memorable visit to Canada and the United States in the summer of 1860. This, it is said, was the first time that press telegrams were used to any extent, the travels of the royal party being more fully reported, especially in the United States, than any before.

His tour through Canada was a continuous triumph, but it was excelled, if possible, in the United States.

It was shortly before he crossed the border that the prince of Wales got his first glimpse of Niagara Falls, and he was so impressed and interested that he visited the place several times. It was there that Blondin, the famous tight rope walker, crossed the gorge for the prince, carrying a man on his back and walking the rope on stilts. The prince granted him an audience later, and the athlete, when asked about the immense difficulty and danger of his feat, responded that he was so confident of his ability that he would undertake to carry him (the prince) in the same fashion. There was a general smile, it is related, at the haste with which the prince declined the offer.

Everywhere throughout the United States the royal party was greeted with the utmost cordiality. At Detroit the crowds were so great that the city's guests were compelled to enter their hotel through a side door. The city was brilliantly illuminated.

By the time Chicago, then not much more than an overgrown village, was reached the prince was so worn out that he collapsed, the only time during the trip. It was accordingly decided to proceed to St. Louis by an obscure way, through the country.

A ludicrous incident enlivened this trip. Desiring to rest at a farm house one day, application was made for permission to the owner, who bore all the earmarks of a former subject of the queen. He expressed his delight at the prospect of entertaining the whole party—with the exception of the duke of Newcastle.

"Not you, Newcastle," he shouted. "I have been a tenant of yours and have sworn that you shall never set foot on my land."

As the duke of Newcastle was virtually in charge of the party and was really the guardian of the young prince on the trip, the stop was not made there, and the farmer, while he got the chance to gratify his ill feeling against his old landlord, missed the opportunity of entertaining, as a house guest, the future king of England.

A number of shooting trips were taken while the royal party was in the west, and the prince of Wales got very fair bags. On one occasion while far out on the prairie, the prince wanted to smoke, and it was found that there was only a single match in the party.

Appreciating the seriousness of the situation, nobody wanted to take the responsibility of striking that lone, solitary match, and lots were finally drawn with blades of grass.

The prince got the short one and, while all the others crowded around him, with hats and coats spread as wind shields, he lighted it. Fortune favored his highness and the match was not blown out before the cigars were going well.

"I never felt so nervous before nor since," said the prince in telling the story later.

There were fetes and entertainments of all sorts when the prince came back to the eastern part of the country. His five days at Washington with President James Buchanan were filled with entertainments, one being a trip to Mt. Vernon, where the prince planted a tree beside the tomb of George Washington. At Philadelphia, for the first time, he heard Adelina Patti sing.

In New York a magnificent ball, with 3,000 leading citizens of the city present, took place in the Academy of Music, and the prince won the gratitude of a score or more of Ameaican mothers by changing his partners often, so that quite a number of their daughters danced with him. The prince, however, appeared to enjoy the great parade of the volunteer firemen even more than the ball. There were 6,000 of them in line and the illustrious guest displayed great animation while reviewing them in Madison square.

The prince's trip into the south was not a long one and it was said at the time that politics was responsible for it being made. The slave holders, it was charged, wanted to show the prince of Wales how well the blacks were treated and that the system was not a brutal one.

It was noted, however, that a great slave sale, widely advertised, was postponed so that it should not take place while he was in Richmond, Va. While not making any specific declarations, the prince indicated his sympathies by refusing to leave his carriage when taken to visit what was regarded as a model slave settlement on a plantation.

It was not long after from the American trip, in the autumn of 1861, that the prince of Wales met his wife, the Princess Alexandra Caroline Marie Charlotte Louis Julia, eldest daughter of Prince Christian of Denmark. He was traveling in Germany at the time and had gone into the cathedral of Worms to inspect the frescoes. There they met the princess and her father, who were also enjoying the paintings. He met the princess several times afterward and they were betrothed September 9, 1862, and married March 10, 1863.

Before his betrothal, however, in March 1862, the prince made his famous visit to the Holy Land. Their trip was memorable in several respects. It was the first time, since the days of Edward I. and Eleanor, that the heir to the English throne had visited the Holy City, and the prince, following the route traversed long before by Richard Coeur de Lion and Edward I., got his first view of Jerusalem from the spot where, according to story, Richard of the Lion Heart hid his face behind his shield with the exclamation:

"Ah, Lord God, if I am not thought worthy to win back the Holy Sepulchre, I am not worthy to see it."

In Jerusalem the young prince and the Rev. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, later dean of Westminster, with whom he was traveling, were permitted to enter the Mosque of Hebron, which had been barred to every royal visitor for nearly 700 years. It is related, as an evidence of the young man's thoughtfulness, that he gathered leaves and flowers from every historical spot visited and carefully prepared them to be sent to his sister, the Princess Royal.

After his return from Asia Minor the prince of Wales formally took his seat in the house of lords and, throughout his life and until his accession to the throne, he was often to be found attending its sessions. Pittsburg Gazette Times.

The Ring of the Maharajah

To One Man It Seemed to Cause Many Deaths.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Yes," said Bentley, puffing at his cigar and looking thoughtfully at a white line that marked the bronze of his finger, "that is where I used to wear the ring of the maharajah of—no matter what."

"And thereby hangs a tale, as I can guess," returned Laidlaw, with a laugh. "Out with it, man!"

"The maharajah was a friend of mine. I hunted tigers with him, and once I saved his life from the beast whose skin is under our feet." The three men looked down at the splendid tiger skin at their feet, at the tawney beauty of the silken hair and then at the cruel head with its snarling lips and deadly fangs.

"I saved his life, and he was very grateful to me for it. He gave me rich presents, and then one day in spite of my protests he insisted upon my accepting the ring. It is a wide band of gold with a carved amethyst sunk deep in the setting. 'Sahib Bentley,' said the maharajah, 'this will bring good fortune, the blessing of heaven and protection from your enemies. Come tomorrow and I will tell you the story of the ring and how you may use it to advantage.'" Bentley paused and looked gravely into the fire.

"And the next day," prompted Laidlaw, "you went and"—

"The next day I went to the palace and found that the maharajah had died suddenly in the night."

"And so you never knew the history of the ring?" remarked Eastman.

"Not until it made new history after it came into my possession. At first I did not wear it through some dislike for barbarous jewelry, and then one day after I had been thinking of the old maharajah and deciding what a white old heathen he had been I slipped it on my finger, and so I grew into the habit of wearing it.

"One night I was dining with a lot of fellows at the Calcutta club when suddenly one of them, a little Englishman by name of Ellsworth, caught my hand and examined the ring thoughtfully. I was explaining the matter of the ring to him when, with a startled cry, he fell over on the floor.

"He was dead when we picked him up," he said presently. "Heart disease, the doctors said."

"And what was your opinion?"

"I had none. To me it was merely a coincidence that he should have expired while examining my ring. I never connected the ring with the case in any way. A year afterward while I was sitting in the veranda of my bungalow a servant announced that a lady wished to see me. She was admitted to the veranda, and I found her to be the wife of an English army officer whom I knew merely by reputation. He was a hard case, and rumor had it that he was disgraced and papers from the home office were en route to Calcutta regarding his suspension.

"Mrs. Fitz-Norton was a very beautiful woman, quiet and refined, but her face expressed the greatest distress. She apologized for intruding upon me and then asked abruptly if I possessed the ring of the maharajah. I told her that I did and that I had it on. She asked to examine it closely, and I drew it off and handed it to her. With a little cry she pressed it to her lips and"— Bentley stopped short and stared defiantly at his companions.

"And what happened?" they asked in unison.

"Why, she sank to the floor unconscious and died that night," said Bentley, passing his hand wearily across his brow.

"The devil!" uttered Laidlaw, looking pityingly at his friend.

"Poisoned," muttered Eastman, leaning forward in his chair, with brooding eyes fixed on the fire.

"Oh, it was examined for poison, and none was found," said Bentley. "It made matters very unpleasant for me, but the fact that it was given to me by the maharajah was generally known, and so it was forgotten after awhile."

"And did you continue to wear it?"

"Yes. After it was examined and found harmless I did wear it for a year or two until"— He paused again in a manner that had been peculiarly exasperating to his hearers.

"Until when?" exclaimed Laidlaw impatiently.

"Until the great tragedy," returned Bentley. He was looking very white and worn now, and the two men noticed for the first time the gauntness of his face and the dark hollows under his eyes. "I was engaged to marry Miss Vivian, a beautiful young English girl, the daughter of the officer in command of the Calcutta barracks. I wished to bestow a ring upon her, and she would have no other than this one. I told her the curse that seemed to be upon it, but she would not listen; she insisted. I gave her the ring, and she died in my arms!" He bent his head upon his breast and stared vacantly at the dancing flames on the hearth.

"Show us the ring, old chap," said Eastman earnestly, ignoring Laidlaw's indignant glance. "Perhaps we can help you."

"No one can help me now," returned Bentley listlessly as he arose and went to a small cabinet in the wall. Presently he returned with a small ebony box, which he gave to Eastman. Then he reseated himself and watched his companions earnestly as they opened the box and rather gingerly removed the maharajah's ring from its white velvet bed.

It was as Bentley had described it, a broad band of pure gold, and sunk deep in the shank was an exquisite amethyst of rich purple tints. The face was exquisitely carved, showing a pagoda in relief. It was harmless looking, but very beautiful.

"May I have it for a day or two, Bentley?" asked Eastman after awhile.

"Certainly. Keep it as long as you like, but remember that it will bring you nothing but evil and evil in its most bitter form. You have a wife and child, and you should not risk disaster."

"I will take my chances," returned Eastman, with a confident smile. "I believe I know how to handle it, old man."

"Remember, I warned you, Eastman, and Laidlaw is witness to my warning," said Bentley, raising a haggard face toward them.

"That's all right, Bentley. And now my advice is to go to bed and get a good night's rest. You are all tired out with your long journey and with the recital of your painful narrative. I believe I can help you, and I will."

They shook hands cordially with their host, but it was not until they had emerged upon the street that Laidlaw spoke.

"That was rather rough of you, Eastman," he said indignantly. "After he told you the story of the girl you should have let the matter drop. He's all broken up over the matter."

"Wouldn't you help him if you could?" asked Eastman quietly.

"Of course I would, but he can't be helped. He's either the victim of a series of remarkable coincidences or else the ring is a poisoned one."

"You are wrong in both instances, Laidlaw. I have a theory which I will work out, and then I will call upon you to congratulate me." The scientist spoke with an air of confidence that impressed his companion.

"I hope you will, Eastman," cried Laidlaw earnestly, "but you can't bring back the dead, you know, and that's what the matter with Bentley."

"Wait and see," was the reply as Eastman turned in at his gate. When he reached his laboratory in the top of the house he flung his coat and hat upon a chair and drew the ebony box from his pocket. Then with a powerful glass he examined the maharajah's ring with frowning brow that denoted the intentness of his interest.

With a long drawn sigh he carefully replaced the ring in the ebony box; then he sat down and wrote several letters, which he was careful to post that night in spite of the lateness of the hour.

Several months passed, during which no mention was made of the amethyst ring. Bentley lounged about his rooms, moody and abstracted, while Laidlaw dropped in now and then for a few brief words of cheer as he made his busy rounds. Eastman came, too, and had long, quiet talks with Bentley during which he strove to learn more of the life which Bentley had spent in India, but he never mentioned the maharajah's ring.

Then one day several months after the evening of Bentley's return from India the three men gathered at Eastman's suggestion in the former's study, Eastman in his corner by the fire, Laidlaw stretched in a steamer chair and Bentley lounging in a great leathern chair with his feet on the skin of the tiger that had threatened the life of the maharajah. They talked upon indifferent subjects for awhile, and then Eastman said carelessly:

"By the way, Bentley, I have discovered the mystery of the ring."

"What!" Bentley sprang to his feet and then passed a hand absently across his brow. "You have discovered the mystery of the—ring?" he stammered.

"Certainly," replied Eastman cheerfully. "You remember the day you saved the life of the maharajah?"

"Surely."

"It was a hot day," said Eastman quietly.

"So it was. Confound it all, but I can't remember much about that day except that they told me I saved the maharajah's life. I was glad of that," said Bentley simply.

"Can you bear a shock, old man?" asked Eastman kindly.

"What is it? Yes, I can bear anything."

"You are mistaken about the deadly character of the ring, Bentley." He spread three letters written on thin foreign paper on his knee and went on: "The old maharajah of no matter what writes me he is enjoying excellent health; Mrs. Fitz-Norton, the wife of the scoundrelly army man, is a cheerful widow; young Ellsworth is as husky and alive as he ever was, and the only man who toppled over at the Calcutta club that night was yourself, for it was the evening of the day of the tiger hunt, and you had suffered a sunstroke on that day, and you have forgotten and imagined things ever since. You are all right now."

A look of intense relief spread over Bentley's face, his eyes brightened, and he looked from Laidlaw's bewildered countenance to Eastman's face of quiet strength. "Thank God," he said. Then, with boyish eagerness, he cried, "And Muriel—Muriel Vivian—my love—what of her?"

"Why," laughed Eastman, with sympathetic moisture in his eyes, "Miss Vivian and her father are registered at the St. Alexis, I believe, and"—

But Bentley had seized his hat and disappeared.

Gosintos.

The teacher stood it as long as she could. Then she said:

"Annie, what are you doing? Why are you mumbling so?"

"Please, teacher," responded Annie, "I'm studying my gosintos."

"Your what?" asked the teacher, puzzled.

"My gosinto."

The teacher pondered. And Annie went on with her mumbling.

"Annie, what is gosintos, or whatever you call it?" now questioned the teacher.

"Gosintos," started Annie, "why gosintos is—is—She halted in confusion.

"Well," resumed the teacher, "then show me how you study your gosinto.

Annie quickly responded as follows:

"Two gosinto two, once; two gosinto four, twice; two gosinto six three times."

A PHANTOM COACH.

It Is a Messenger of Death to an English Family.

Up the drive of a certain manor house situated in one of the southwest counties of England a phantom coach with spectral horses and driver is always heard or seen prior to the death of the head of the family or of some important member of it.

On one occasion of quite recent years a number of gentlemen and two ladies who formed a portion of the house party at Christmas were startled on their return at dusk to hear the sounds of several horses' hoofs coming up the drive. Upon turning, all the party saw an old fashioned coach with a team of four white horses advancing toward them. They drew aside, and as the coach passed them the two ladies screamed and fell almost fainting in the arms of their companions. One was the daughter of the house.

All retired to rest about 11 o'clock, some, no doubt, to think over the mysterious appearance of the coach and others to sleep. Early in the morning a telegram, which had been dispatched too late the previous night for delivery, came to hand, conveying the intelligence that the only son of the house had been drowned while wild fowling in the fens.

It was nearly forty years before that the coach had last been seen, although seventeen years previously it had been heard to drive up to the front door and away again down the avenue in the fuiddle of the night. On this occasion the head of the family had died in his sleep the next night.

THE FATA MORGANA.

Conditions That Must Obtain to Allow of Its Production.

The fata morgana is a singular aerial phenomenon akin to the mirage. It is seen in many parts of the world, but most frequently and in greatest perfection at the strait of Messina, between Sicily and Italy. So many conditions must coincide, however, that even there it is of comparatively rare occurrence. To allow of its production the sun must be at an angle of forty-five degrees with the water, both sky and sea must be calm and the tidal current sufficiently strong to cause the water in the center to rise higher than on the edges of the strait. When these conditions are fully met the observer on the heights of Calabria, looking toward Messina, will behold a series of rapidly changing pictures, sometimes of most exquisite beauty.

Castles, colonnades, successions of beautiful arches, palaces, cities, with houses and streets and church domes, mountains, forests, grottoes, will appear and vanish, to be succeeded perhaps by fleets of ships, sometimes placidly sailing over the deep, sometimes inverted, while a halo like a rainbow surrounds every image. It is supposed that the images are due to the irregular refractive powers of the different layers of air above the sea, which magnify, repeat and distort the objects on the Sicilian shore beyond, but to the Italians these singular appearances are the castles of the Princess Morgana, and the view of them is supposed to bring good fortune to the beholder.

The Florin.

The florin, one of the most famous of modern coins, originated in Florence. Some say that it gave the name to the city, while others assert that it was first so called because it had on it a flower de luce, from the Italian florone, or flower, for the same reason that an English silver piece is called a crown or certain gold pieces in France indifferently a napoleon or a louis or the ten dollar gold piece in America an eagle. Two countries, Austria and Holland, have retained the florin as a unit of monetary value, taking it at a time when it was very universal in Europe, its usage having been rendered general by the financial supremacy of the little states of northern Italy and the imperfect coinage system of the other countries of the continent.

Reputations.

"The autocrat," remarked the recondite person, "made a remark the import of which escaped me until the other day. He said, 'Many a man has a reputation because of the reputation he expects to have some day.'"

"That's not a half bad remark," suggested the practical person, "but my son—just out of college, you know, and in the habit of thinking humpbacked thoughts, as it were—said something only this morning that appealed to me. 'Some men,' he said, 'get a reputation and keep it; other men get a reputation and make it keep them.'"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Rare Self Control.

"He's a remarkable man. When he sees an unfamiliar word he looks it up in the dictionary and finds out what it means."

"Nothing so remarkable about that."

"Yes, but he doesn't try to lug it into conversation right away."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Her Composition.

"How could he have married that termagant wife of his? I don't see what she was made of."

"That is the answer. She was maid of money."—Baltimore American.

Easily Remembered.

Waiter—Beg pardon, sir, but the gentleman at this table usually remembers me. Mr. McTavish—I've nae doot o' that, ma mannie. Why, you're quite a comic.—London Telegraph.

Who has deceived thee as often as thyself?—Franklin.

SOLVING THE BOY PROBLEM.

"Upon my soul, John," moans Mrs. Worry, "vacation's coming, and what to do with those boys I don't know. I can put the girls where I want them, and they will stay there. But, oh, those boys! What shall we do with them?"

Dear lady, be calm. Please pardon your humble servant for butting in, but have you tried chickens on those calathumpian kids?

It beats goose grease, paregoric, sulphur and lasses and scolding.

It will save laying on of hands and lying awake nights and wear on your arm and new slippers and those boys' pants, and the boys will like you more and be busy and happy and good and make some money and furnish nice eggs and fries for the table, and you'll be happy and lose your wrinkles and get fat watching those proud boys with their roosters, and if you don't catch the hen fever it will not be because other boys' nice mothers didn't.

No, of course you were never a boy, but most girls are tomboys. Yet real boys are different.

Nobody but a boy knows that awful bubbling up inside of him that has to get outside some way and those aspirations that most mothers don't dream of. But fathers do unless they are dried up fossils, or are tied up to the world, the flesh and the devil, or are trying to make folks believe they weren't born boys, but grew great in the twinkling of an eye.

Note the boy in the picture. Is he proud of that big nine pound Brahma? Well, rather! He's a real rollicking American boy, and there are lots of them, and they are mighty good stuff, too.

Thousands of these boys are tied up with chickens. We meet them everywhere on our travels. We hardly get into a town when some young fellow finds us out and coaxes us into his dad's back yard to look at his birds.

And many of these dads have an eye to business. They know a good thing when they see it. They buy their boys good birds for a start, help them build coops and give the boy cash for feed. After that the thing goes itself. An American boy's back of it; it's got to go.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

Those who run incubators with gas should remember that gas is sometimes turned off without notice to consumers. A New Jersey fancier lost 3,000 duck eggs last year when the gas was shut off at night. The eggs were due to hatch in a few days too.

The first electric incubator was made at Buffalo, N. Y., by electric power furnished by Niagara, and chicks were hatched in this machine at the A. P. A. meeting at Niagara Falls by power from the great cataract.

"How much does grass cost?" "Never stopped to think. Not much, I guess." Well, that's what geese cost for six months in the year, and you can thus sell goslings at six months and make all profit but the first few weeks' feed.

W. R. Mickle, the Texas turkey breeder, made more profit on his turkeys last year than on 200 acres of Collin county black land. He has four flocks consisting of forty birds each.

You may easily decide whether the heat is the same in all parts of your incubator by placing thermometers all through the egg chamber.

Four young men of Waynesboro, Pa., have decided to start a skunk farm. They want skunks. They expect them to breed so fast that 500 may be killed off yearly and sold for $4.50 apiece. If your poultry doesn't pay here's a chance, or if skunks are after your hens here's a chance to make a dollar by nabbing skunks by the collar.

Let us warn you against dusting clucks with sulphur. It isn't extra for old stock and blinds the chicks. As louse powder relegate brimstone to the hereafter.

If chicks are hatched in incubators and raised in brooders they nearly always end up with lice in the fall. If they don't get them anywhere else the English sparrows kindly contribute the crawlers.

Dr. Wiley rises to remark: "We get the smallest eggs that can be produced. The principles of breeding are being applied to hens in such a way that they are laying the smallest eggs possible."

The Washington egg eaters are knocking against the high price of eggs, and the Washington egg producers are knocking against the chicken exclusion law. If those egg fiends allowed the law they ought not to jaw nor cry if it makes eggs high.

L. M. Barnitz.

Sanitary Coops.

A long rain, or even a short and sharp rain, the swift down-pour of a thunder shower or the heavy fall of a wet night, is only too apt to result in fatalities among the chicken coops. The tiny spark of animal vitality in those baby chicks is easyly quenched, and cold and wet, especially with close confinement in polluted air, are very often enough to wipe out summarily the hope of future value and profit. Just at this season, the probable changes of weather make an element in the situation that has an important influence on the success of the season, or the contrary.

The sanitary chicken coop is clean and dry, those are the two most important considerations. It may be cheaply and roughly knocked together, meant only to serve the need of a short campaign, and serve its purpose perfectly. It may be well built, a unit in a careful plan and a good system, costing more, and yet even cheaper in the long run, and serve the immediate purpose being to shelter and raise a brood of healthy and vigorous chickens.

The coop with a sloping roof and a floor a little raised above the surrounding ground is fairly safe from any ordinary rain, provided care is taken that the open side is turned away from the prevailing wind. This is a matter that always needs attention when rain is coming on. The coop should usually stand open to the south—that is, open to the sun—but with rain and a strong south wind, that may mean a few drowned chickens. In fact, even without rain, the direction of the wind may well be considered in turning the coops. Wet coops should always be dried as quickly as possible! It is worth while to remember that even grown fowls are extremely susceptible to the ill-effects of dampness, and that dry quarters are among the absolutely indispensable requirements to maintain health.

On the question of coops with or without floors, there is something to be said on both sides. A clean and dry floor, especially early in the spring and while the chicks are very young, has its obvious advantages. On the other hand, there does seem to be some influence in the direct contact with the ground that favors strength and vigor. If the ground is itself clear, free from the contamination that spells gapes, and very often changed, either by removal or turning over—that is, by taking room enough to give fresh ground every day or two, or else spading up fresh earth as often, you have ideal conditions. Young chicks so placed ought to do their prettiest, and will usually grow and feather out rapidly, so that in watching them one is pretty sure to believe that they are better off without a floor under them.

Then it is not altogether an easy matter to keep a floored coop strictly clean. There is no such thing as raising chickens with high success without labor. We must expect to work for what we get in this as in everything else. But in each individual case there are apt to be special circumstances which effect the balance of comparative difficulty in carrying out the practical work. The Country Gentleman.

SCRAMBLED EGGS WITH TOMATOES.-Six eggs, one and three-fourths cupfuls of tomatoes, one tablespoonful of sugar, one slice of onion, one-half cupful of salt, one eighth teaspoonful of pepper. Simmer tomato and sugar together for five minutes. Remove onion and add tomato. Season eggs slightly that have been lightly beaten. Cook as scrambled eggs. Serve on toast or whole wheat bread.

BAKED BEAN SOUP.- Three cupfuls of cold baked beans, three pints of water one onion, two stalks of celery, one and one-half cupfuls stewed tomatoes, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one teaspoonful Chili sauce, salt and pepper to taste. Put the ingredients in a saucepan and simmer for twenty minutes. Rub through a seive, add tomatoes and Chili sauce, season with the salt and pepper, combined with the butter and flour cooked together.

BEAN SALAD IN BEET CASES.-Boil round red beets until tender; then remove skins and flatten the bottoms so they will stand up. Season these beets with vinegar, a little sugar, salt, cayenne pepper and melted butter. Let stand until the seasoning has penetrated them, then remove from vinegar and scoop out the center of the beets. Fill these cavities with mayonnaise. A good salad is made by combining the cold baked beans with celery, an onion or two, and mayonnaise or any other good dressing.

RAISIN COOKIES. One cupful of sugar, three cupfuls of flour, one cupful of raisins, two eggs, one-half cupful of hot water, one-fourth teaspoonful of nutmeg, one-half teaspoonful of soda, and one teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Beat the butter to a cream, add the eggs well beaten, then the soda dissolved in the hot water; then add the nutmeg and the cream of tartar sifted with the flour, and, last of all, add the raisins that have been run through a chopper, or else chopped fine with a knife. Drop the batter by teaspoonfuls in a well-buttered pan rather far apart. If they run too much, add a little more flour to the batter. Put a whole raisin on top of each cake. Bake in a moderate oven until brown. These will impove with age.

GINGER CAKES. One pint of New Orleans molasses, one cupful of melted lard, two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, one tablespoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful of salt, and flour to roll. Put the soda in the molasses and heat until it foams, then stir in the lard and the yolks of the eggs, then the flour and the whites of the eggs. Roll out rather thin and in moderate oven.

SPICE CAKE.-One-half cupful of butter, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of sour milk, one cupful of chopped raisins, two and a one-half cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half each of cloves, nutmeg and ginger. Half lard can be used if desired. Cream together the butter and sugar, then add two well beaten eggs, the soda dissolved in the sour milk; then add the spices and then the flour, and last of all the raisins. Poultry Ailments.

"Only in rare instances does poultry require doctoring," says Kate V. Saint-Maur in WOMAN HOME COMPANION for May, "yet it is well to be prepared with sufficient knowledge to recognize the symptoms of approaching trouble. A few small coops should be kept in some dry, sheltered outhouse, to be used as quarantine quarters. Empty drygoods boxes turned on their sides, with half the front boarded across and a door of wire netting to close the other half, make good coops for individual patients. They should be covered all around, sides and top and bottom, with roofing-paper, to insure freedom from draft. The boxes may be any size, but I like them about eighteen inches wide and high, and about two and a half feet long. To avoid dampness, and for convenience in attending to the birds, it is well to elevate them on legs or stand them on a shelf or bench. Before using, or whenever they are vacated, they should be disinfected and the inside thoroughly painted with whitewash. The enameled cups without handles can be attached to the side of the coop by wire loops."

Weaver, of Saltillo, made up an automobile party which visited State College for the track meet on Saturday and stopped over in Bellefonte for supper on the trip home.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Taylor on Tuesday shipped their household goods to Pitcairn, where they have concluded to again make their home. Mr. Taylor was at Pitcairn for a time, but for the last month he has been back in Bellefonte. Bellefont's loss is Pitcairn's gain, for Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are good citizens and our regret is that he finds it more desirable to locate at some distant point.

Of interest socially to the many Bellefonte friends of the prospective bride is the announcement of the wedding at Snow Shoe, on Wednesday, June 29, of Miss Maude Glenn Budinger and Mr. H. T. Mann, the latter of Mill Hall. The ceremony will be performed at 6 o'clock, P. M. The prospective bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Budinger. After their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Mann will reside at Orviston, where the former is identified with the Centre Brick & Clay Company.

Our callers on Tuesday included John Dillen, of Nittany, who adjusted his subscription to "The Republican" and advanced his paper another year. Mr. Dillen has been working for the Hewit & McNitt Lumber Company for the last three years. At present he is working for that progressive company on its big operation at Waddle. Mr. Dillen thinks his employers are good people to work for, and the fact that he has been with them so long is the best evidence that they regard him a good man inhis line.

We had a very enjoyable little chat on Tuesday with Henry Woomer, of State College, who called to advance his subscription to "The Republican" another year. Mr. Woomer is a general contractor and in recent years has been doing quite a lot of concrete work. He has built a number of houses, sidewalks, etc., at State College and expects to be very busy in that line as soon as the annual commencement is over. This week Mr. Woomer is building a concrete wall for the Bellefonte Lumber Company, at this place. Like everybody else from that hustling town, Mr. Woomer has every confidence in State College and its prospect for an even more rapid growth in the future.

A very pleasant caller at our office on Monday was A. E. Rupp, of Boalsburg, who entered his name as a subscriber to "The Republican." Mr. Rupp is a son of John A. Rupp, at one time Register of Centre county. He recently graduated from the State Forestry School, Mt. Alto, and in the next week or ten days will open a forestry camp in the Bear Meadows. His work there will be in putting State forestry lands in shape to be as free as possible from fire. A corps of men will be stationed at the camp while the work is in progress. As a representative of the State Forestry Department, Mr. Rupp has aided in the planting of 105,000 young trees, chiefly white pine. These were planted near Monroe Furnace. The course of instruction at the Mt. Alto school is most thorough. It covers a period of three years. Entrance is by competitive examination. Each student must file a $500 bond during his attendance at the school. The most rigid discipline is exacted. The training, however, is far above that of the average school and the young man who is able to complete the course is fitted to engage in a work that each year is being accorded more attention and appreciation by the public.

Miss Lillian Curry, of Waddle, is visiting her sister, Mrs. James Bailey.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Gray Meek were visitors to Philipsburg on Friday of last week.

County Commssioner John Dunlap, Clerk J. Homer Decker and Deputy Supreme Organizer Walter S. Greevy, of Altoona, went to Pine Grove Mills on Tuesday to further enlist interest among residents of that section in the Bellefonte Lodge Loyal Order of Moose. The lodge is rapidly increasing its membership.

George A. Beezer and Dr. DeLaun Stewart departed on Tuesday for Mifflinburg, where they planned meeting Mr. Orwick and starting for a trout fishing trip near Lewisburg. If there are any trout left in that part of the State by the time they return, it will be because they are of the brand that never look at a worm or notice a fly.

Philip Garbrick, Roland Spicer, Harry Aikey and Harry Hazel departed on Saturday for Franklin county, where they will construct several miles of State road, for which R. B. Taylor, of this place, has the contract. Philip Garbrick will superintend the operation. Before going away he became a subscriber to "The Republican" in order that he might be sure to get all the news from home.

Heinle, the Democratic Congressional candidate, had a narrow escape from serious injury on Sunday night While working on a pole of the Bellefonte Electric Company, in the rear of East Linn Street, he fell to the ground. At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Philipsburg & Susquehanna Valley Railroad on Monday it was decided to extend the road from its present terminus, at Fernwood, to Utahville, a distance of four miles, to connect with the Bells Gap railroad. The proposed extension provides a short cut from Philipsburg to Punxsutawney as well as to Altoona and Johnstown.

The Bellefonte Fuel & Supply Company this week completed the 300-foot retaining wall along Spring Creek which will be a source of great protection to the company's property in time of floods. The wall also greatly adds to the general appearance of Water Street. Bellefonte Council could add much to the appearance of that part of town which is seen by all visitors, if it would have the rubbish cleaned out of Spring Creek, between the falls, at Noll's Laundry, and the Central Railroad of Penna. station. It would take less than one day's work for one man to add one thousand percent to the general appearance of the stream.

Among the callers at "The Republican" office on Saturday was Harry Sultz, of Curtin. Mr. Shultz is one of our valued subscribers and while here adjusted his subscription and received a receipt for another year in advance. We appreciated his call and trust he will again favor us. Mr. Shultz is a very genial fellow and while he was sitting in our office we were congratulating ourselves that his mission was such a pleasant one, for he is built on the lines of a football player and our suspicion is that if he were properly trained he could put Jack Johnson to sleep in less time than it takes to tell it.

Congressman J. N. Langham, of Indiana county, several days ago introduced the Rynder pension bill, which was drafted by Theodore P. According to Mr. Rynder, his bill would provide moderate relief for over 500,000 soldiers, the estimated amount to cover proposed increased pensions being about $21,000,000. Mr. Rynder contends that his bill is far superior to the officers' retirement bill, which in his judgment will be benefit only about 10,000 men.
